Re: BIBFELDT AND THE MILLENIUM

I believe your assessment is correct (wave/particle theories. As Max Planck's quantum theory so elegantly delineates, electromagnetic energy forms demonstrate both wave-like and particulate character. Actually I believe he said: "Der toe-bone conecta to de foot-bone" or something like that.

It may also be helpful to determine if a tessera in the space-time continuum might make it possible for a person to move from Dec. 31, 1999 to Jan. 1, 2001 directly. And would sh/he experience actual or virtual reality in the process?

These are weighty matters and I'm grateful we have the legacy of Herr Doktor to inform our investigations (or not).

Herr Doktor may assist in displaying the insoluble intricacies of this problem, but he'll NEVER be of any use in solving it. In fact, knowing the degree to which he is calendrically impaired, he'll probably be a year late (or maybe early) in publishing his material. It certainly does seem to be the kind of perplexity to which he has been irresistably drawn. Of course, he would probably take a mediating, both/and type of stance on this as on all other issues. I.e., the millenium both does and does not begin on Jan.1,2000. Something about wave and particle theories in physics, I think. I will pas this issue on to those who are in charge of Bibfeldt's writing schedule. Thanks for the suggestion.

Subject: BIEBELDT PAPERS

I've been made aware that the honorable doctor's dissertation research focused on the disappearance of the year 0. Has anyone recognized how valuable and timely this is??? In less than 5 years we must convince a callous, frivolous world that the new millenium does NOT commence on Jan. 1, 2000. As Michener described in his novel "Texas", people in these parts have been shot for failing to observe what others thought was the proper (io.e., earlier) day.

As the resident expert, would you consider BiebelDT's theoretical construction and research apparatus capable of sustaining arguments for determining the cosmically correct arrival of the 3rd millenium? Do we have a doctoral student capable and willing to propose this as his topic?
