Dear Sir

Thank you very much for your letter. I will rewrite ^{the} ~~your~~ article, & try to make such a bolder outlay as artistic as possible. Daily journalism gets one into the way of speaking too grossly.
I am very busy lecturing & writing just at present, but I shall hope to send you the revised version by the end of next week

Dear Sir

I am venturing to send you, under cover of Mr Barnett's kind introduction, an article on a subject which is at present of great interest to educationalists
- the higher education of the workman. I have lectured during the past two years for the Oxford Extension Society, & have therefore acquired considerable experience of the working of University Teaching.

I have also become convinced of the complete uselessness of University Extension as a means of educating the English workman, & the need of some new effort.

This article is an endeavour to put these ideas before the public.

I enclose a copy of testimonials &c as a means of acquainting you with my record.

I am at present engaged during the session as Parliamentary representative ("Observer") for the Pall Mall Gazette, & lecture when free. But I work for the P. M. & all the year round more or less, & am writing in the new literary paper
"the Bookman"

My dear Sir, It is most kind of you to ask me to write an article on Brahms, but I really have not the time! I am sorry.

There is one man who would write a far better article on this subject than I could, namely,

W. H. Hadow M.A. Mus B.
Fellow & Tutor of Worcester Coll.
Oxford.

He has made modern composers his special study & has "all-about--Brahms" at his finger's ends. No doubt you know the two books on modern composers which Hadow published at Seeley's. He is a complete master of the subject and his literary style is admirable.

With many thanks
I am yours truly

Dear Sir,

Thanks for your kind letter.

It is singular that for a year or more something like what you suggested has been in my mind. My primary idea was an exposition of a new system of Apologetics which has for some time been much discussed in Germany, and ^{has been} more fully expounded by Frank of Erlangen. But, as a kind of background to this, a discussion would be necessary of how far the current Apologetic has become obsolete.

I was thinking of a small book; but, to begin with, I might try an article. Unfortunately I am a very busy man, and I fear I may not be able to submit anything quite soon.

The subject you an interesting one. But I cannot promise you an article upon it.

Perhaps you will be able to find some one else who will undertake it.

Dear W Buntling

Your note of the 6th night in consequence of the prehistory address.

I believe that was the apex about Stanley. But I have not yet had his news both I am not sufficiently familiar with his proceedings & have formed more than a provisional op. in my mind: and have I at present the leisure or inclination to take up the subject. - I must therefore ask you to employ

MORNING POST

BERLIN

Potsdamerstrasse 8

October 3, 1890

Dear Mr. Bunting, The evening before I received your letter of Sept. 30th I had a long talk with Dr. Peters. At first he seemed disinclined to write anything which, he thought, might anticipate his book, but, when I told him that what was wanted was a "counterblast" to Stanley, he at once jumped at the idea and said he would write an article entitled "Emin and Stanley" with the greatest of pleasure in order to present Emin's case as told him largely by Emin himself.

This article he was to begin at once. I will see him today and tell him to go ahead.
Kindly let me know on what date the article should reach you. Dr. Peters proposes to write it in English and wishes to have it corrected in point of language & put into shape afterwards.

I remain

Yours very truly,
George Saunders.

Dear Mr. Bunting,

Would you kindly cast your eye over Lieutenant Trump's letter, and consider whether you can conveniently insert some such "Note" as I enclose at the end of the "Contemporary" for either March or April? I think he has some right to complain on the one point with which it deals & if so, I should be glad to ~~make~~ such awards as are possible to him, and put the responsibility in the suppression of the truth so far as he is concerned,

Dear Sir

When I set about the task of writing out the article I undertook to prepare for you I found myself obliged, in order to state matters clearly, to go into such details as seemed to infringe the letter of my contract with Mr Stanley. While feeling inclined to write in defence of myself & comrades, & to expose the unjust attacks of Mr Stanley, I find I am hampered by the original conditions & my hands are tied in such a manner that I am unable even to write the article proposed. I regret exceedingly that I have been forced to sign up writing for me, & I have telegraphed at once on my decision, in order to inconvenience for as little as possible.

The disappointment done is intense, & I feel that the advantage Mr Stanley has taken of me is most unfair: it would be difficult for him to obtain judgment against me at law, but knowing that he will instantly take proceedings against me, & will cause me an endless amount of trouble, I find that I must resign myself to being thus judged & condemned for a little while longer, in order to avoid losing the opportunity of clearing myself at an early date.

Trusting, under the circumstances, you will forgive my apparent vacillation.

Believe me,
Yours very truly

Dear Sir,

I received your letter yesterday morning but was unable to reply at once, as the matter required careful consideration. I should most gladly accept your invitation to write about Stanley's book & I could point out countless inaccuracies & mis-statements, in fact this is an opportunity I would willingly embrace, but I am somewhat hampered by unfortunate conditions that are ~~un~~likely to prevent me from writing with the freedom I desire. I have received intense aggravation through Stanley's treatment of my reports & his outrageously unjust accusations made against the Officers of the Rear Guard. I am quite ready to prepare an article but it might not be such as you require. Could you let me know what form you wish the paper to assume & whether you would be satisfied with one that would set out clearly Stanley's errors of judgment & misrepresentation of fact - to say nothing of the glaring contradictions contained in his varying statements - yet without disclosing the details of the true innocence of the matter, I believe I could write a readable paper for your magazine on such lines.

As I do not know how long an article you require I am unable to say whether I could get it ready in time for the next number, but I would do my best to hasten it on hearing from you, as I presume you would prefer it at once. Thanking you for your letter & trusting that I may be able to carry out your suggestion.

Believe me,

Yours truly having spent some years in London where he was ^{engaged in} attached to the mission work under the personal oversight of Cardinal Manning. Father Gualdi was full of sympathy with the Irish, above all else he knew & appreciated the name carried confidence wherever he was known. Mgr Perreco's personal opinions were ~~not~~ concealed. The head of the Catholic hierarchy at Westminster at Dublin often went to make believe that the Perreco mission was certain to end in advantageously for the Irish cause.

It was not the intention of the Pope that the mission should end at all. So far as can be ascertained the original idea was to grow Monsignor Perreco into a kind of irregular nuncio, whose immediate primary duty was to investigate the affairs of Ireland, but who when that investigation was completed he had no use to leave the United Kingdom. He might if he pleased leave Ireland but only on condition that he took up his abode in England or Scotland.

Sir Percy Bunting,

N.W.

My dear Sir Percy,

I had a very interesting two hours and a half with Lord Hugh Cecil last night, and found him in a very hopeful state of mind from our point of view. He does not think the Peers will refuse to admit the 400, and he thinks that the immediate result of that would be the abolition of the House of Lords and the creation of a new Senate, which he is quite prepared for. He entirely agrees with our contention that the Liberals must have a fair chance of a majority in the House of Lords as it is to be reconstituted, and he would cordially welcome any effort made to avert a violent collision. It was a most interesting talk. I will tell you more about it when we meet.

I am,

Yours sincerely,

My dear Sir Percy,

I had a very interesting two hours and a half with Lord Balfour last night, and found him in a very helpful state of mind from our point of view. He does not think the peers will refuse to admit the 400, and he thinks that the immediate result of that would be the abolition of the House of Lords and the creation of a new Senate, which he is quite prepared for. He entirely agrees with our contention that the Liberals must have a fair chance of a majority in the House of Lords as it is to be reconstituted, and he would cordially welcome any effort made to avert a violent collision. It was a most interesting talk. I will tell you more about it when we meet.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Sir Percy,

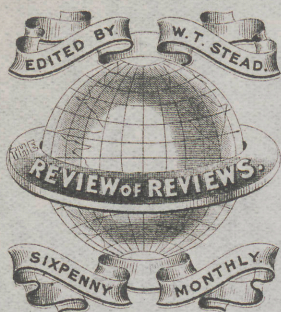

Do you know whether you could let me have any back numbers of the January "Contemporary" at a reduced price? I can get them at Smith & Sons or from the "Times Library second hand, but if you have any unsold copies I might as well buy them from you as from the other people. I want about half a dozen.

By the bye I never told you the real origin of that article on the revival of the Slavs which you published for me under my name. It was really written automatically, partly by my hand and partly by that of another medium, and the control claimed to be none other than that of Catherine the Great. Of course, I did not mention this, but it may interest you more especially as she is very anxious to write another one on the future of Russia.

I am,

Yours sincerely,

Dear Sir Percy,

I have got an idea about an article since you were here. What do you think of having an article concerning the political ideas of the King's tutor! Canon Dalton was two years with the King, went round with him and his brother in the Bacchante, and there were two thick volumes published professing to be the Journal of the Princes in their journey round the world, consisting of letters, which they wrote obviously under Dalton's direction, which covered a great many questions on Colonial and Imperial politics. Besides these there are several hundred pages in which Dalton, who was officially described as the governor and was really the tutor of the Princes, sets forth his own political ideas, which no doubt he did his utmost to impress upon our present King. The interesting thing is that Dalton was a tremendous pro-German, and was very strongly in favour of making Germany the heir of the Ottoman Empire. I was reading up this book the other day, and I think I shall write the article for somebody. Naturally, therefore, I would like you to have it, if you think it would be worth while. I shall dispose of it somewhere else, in case you do not care for it. But I think it would be somewhat off the ordinary lines, and as there are occasional but not many glimpses of Prince George as a human personality in the book it might be worth while.

Yours sincerely,

Dear Sir Percy,

I have got an idea about an article which you were here. When I first thought of having an article on the political ideas of the King's tutor, Canon Dalton, was two years ago. I was then, I think, in the United States, and there were two or three articles published in the world, consisting of letters, which they wrote occasionally under Dalton's direction, which covered a great many questions on Colonial and Imperial politics. I remember these were several hundred pages in which Dalton, who was then described as the governor and was really the ruler of the Empire, sets forth his own political ideas, which he did his utmost to impress upon our business men. The interesting thing is that Dalton was a tremendous pro-German, and was very strongly in favour of making Germany the centre of the Empire. I was reading up this book the other day, and I think I shall write the article for somebody. Naturally, therefore, I would like you to have it, if you think it would be worth while. I shall dispose of it somewhat where else, in case you do not care for it. But I think it would be somewhat of the ordinary lines, and as there are occasional, but not many, glimpses of Prince George as a man, certainly in the book is not worth while.

Sir Percy Bunting,

Dear Sir Percy Bunting,

I think you and I have reason to congratulate ourselves a little upon having tardily roused Sir Edward Grey up to realise the significance of the speech which Mr. Taft made just twelve months ago. When the "Contemporary Review" came out I sent it to Lord Morley who was then acting as locum-tenens for Sir Edward Grey at the Foreign Office. He read it and then spoke to Nicolson about it. Nicolson said he had already read it. "Well", said Morley what is the answer to it?" Nicolson did not give a very clear reply, and Morley went on to say "the question is how are we to answer the American proposal?" "Oh", said Nicolson, "we have telegraphed that we will give it our sympathetic consideration, but any proposals must receive very careful examination". "Why", said Morley, "did you add that last part. Is it not obvious enough, and by putting it in it looks as if your sympathetic consideration was very qualified. But are you prepared to accept the American proposal in the sense of Stead's article". "Oh", said Morley, "I do not think that you can expect us to do that". After this Morley had dinner with Grey and talked the matter over, and I think that we may fairly conclude that Grey's astounding Declaration was the result of Morley's representations.

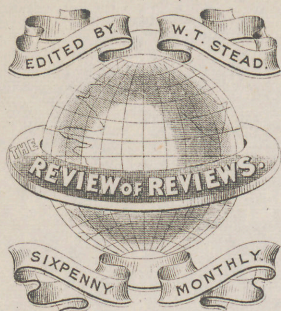

Of course, all this is very private, but I thought you would like to know the share which the Contemporary ~~which~~ has probably had in bringing about the new departure. I am afraid that Grey has plunged once more somewhat recklessly, and that he will recoil just as he did on the question of armaments.

I do not know whether you would care to have anything written about it for the next number of the Contemporary. If you do let me know.

Yours sincerely,

My dear Miss Bunting,

I was shocked and grieved to learn when I was at Vienna that your dear father had been summoned home. I saw him just before I went and he seemed so well and hearty. It will give me the greatest pleasure to respond to your kind invitation to send you some words about him. I will let you have them in due course.

Dear Mr. Bunting -

It just occurs to me that possibly a short article upon Mrs. Butler & the Federation might be in season for the Contemporary for July. I do not press it at all because I have any amount of work in hand, but in case you want it, I am willing to write it & if you think I could do it. Morgan & Scott are publishing a 100 page monograph on the subject from my pen, it being the first chapter of my unpublished book. I will see you at the N.Y.A. tomorrow afternoon, when you can tell me.

Dear Mr. Punting

I have been thinking over what you said about borrowing our Government by formalism. Leaving my own personal wishes independant of all, there is how it strikes me as an editor.

I should say if I were in your place tooked a Review to which I had a contribution from a person whose notoriety was due to an incident which ended on the 18th of January, that the selling value of his article would be ~~more~~ materially greater if published on Feb 1 than March 1.

That is losing the intrinsic value of the article if anonymous. ~~less~~ is the same next year as now. But its value for the moment, depends chiefly upon its having been written ~~to~~ in good. by a man who just now is in a small way but of a notoriety.

I think there is no obvious harm that I should apologize for inserting in it, were it not that I hardly mentioned him and I think is the sound prudential policy.

That is today chiefly. The selling policy is to publish an article while the author's circumstances or situation gives it a little federal steel than its intrinsic worth. That federal will be gone in March. It is now. but it diminishes daily. But pray don't break and fearing for it from your sake. I am perfectly willing to make any sacrifice.

But I am convinced the true policy is to publish now. I am somewhat ~~not~~ stead

Dec 10th 89

Dear Mr Stead,

I am sorry I have delayed answering your note, I have been very busy and besides I found it necessary to consult not only our own publishers but Kegan Paul's.

I find the view very strongly held and I must say that I concur in it myself that such a publication as I understand Mr Newnes and yourself to intend could not be acquiesced in.

I need not assure you how sorry I am personally to raise any objection to an enterprise of yours but it seems to me and others that this new monthly would not be a mere review or notice in which extracts would be incidental & illustrative but a journal whose raison d'être it would be to copy and supersede the expensive monthlies.

Very Sincerely

Dear Miss Bunting

I am venturing to address you thus personally as Mr G. P. Zook has given me permission to use his name as an introduction. I have recently been entrusted with the very interesting task of writing the life of W. D. Stead and I ^{am having} ~~have~~ placed in my hands all the biographical material possessed by his family. This is coming to me in instalments -

Miss Hetherington, for so many years Mr Stead's indexer, is sorting it out for me.

small A recent instalment includes a bundle of letters from your father & mother, for the most part dating from the 'eighties & Nineties.
I wonder whether you have in your possession Mr Stead's replies or any other letters of his or documents of any kind which would be useful to me and which you could lend me?

I would propose to submit to you later, with your approval, a type written copy of those portions of my book in which I shall be making any use of the correspondence.

Possibly you yourself may be able to help me with a few lines of reminiscence of some episode in Dr Stead's career not generally known? I should be extremely obliged to you if you could.

Very truly
Yours

Frederic Whyte.

Dear Miss Bunting

Many thanks for your letter and the two bundles of Dr Stead's etc. I am particularly glad to have your own memory of that Black Forest trip and the astonished old lady. If either you yourself or any member of your family should ever recall any other amusing incidents of the kind they will be very welcome to me. Perhaps I had better give you my Club address as I shall be leaving Oxford soon. Letters will always reach me if addressed to me at the R. Automobile Club Park Road

With many thanks
Yours sincerely
Frederic Whyte
