a Kentuckian
a President 1901

Conclusion

Only Mr. Roosevelt would have thought that the dinner table of the White House was the place.

But when as the representative of the whole people of the United States, he has a negro dine at the White House, the significance of his act is greatly changed.

In the one instance he expresses individual taste and judgment and in the second he commits a whole nation to belief in social recognition of the negro.

Social equality of the negro.

Social recognition of the negro must eventually result in miscegenation from which he recoils.

Errors in Theme II Continued

The man of the north can never have felt the negro problem to be a real one since he sees only an occasional negro and that one of the better type.

He fails to feel the real vital problem.

It can not be that any student of history and ethnology, of Anglo-Saxon tradition would ascend to such a solution of the race problem in the United States.

The effect of this unthoughtful and spontaneous act on the part of Mr. Roosevelt, will be to make the Southern people withdraw from him.

Corrected.

The man of the north can never learn just the negro problem to be a real one, since he has only an occasional negro and then one of the better type.

It fails to get the real problem.

It can not be that any student of history and ethnology, who can claim as his own Anglo-Saxon traditions would consent to such a solution of the race problem in the United States.

Errors in Theme II continued

The criticism may arouse impulses which if repressed in school, will widen the breach.

Mr. Washington himself has decidedly lost in the incident.

One would even think his good angel must have been sleeping

Private individuals and colleges in America might be free to banish upon him such recognition and such honors as they would; and only so this freedom was felt.

this act justifies the misgivings of many, when Mr. Roosevelt was placed in the position of possible president, ~~misgivings~~ lest he should be wanting in the judicial temperament essential in the President of the United States.

unnecessary repetition.

All lovers of American institutions were unified in the presence of a common enemy. Any disposition to distrust Mr. Roosevelt because of his impetuous nature was waived.

Corrected

Although she had not for many years seen one of her sons in the executive mansion, at least now she could claim the President as half her own.

Corrected

Priest and prophet of the negro race.

Errors in Theme II Continued

Dinner table cannot be time.

Only Mr. Roosevelt could have brought that the dinner table of the White House was the time and place.

Incorrect omission of pronouns.

But when the representatives of the whole people of the United States has a negro dine at the White House, the significance of the act is greatly changed.

Vague

In the one instance he expresses individual taste and judgment and in the second he reminds a whole nation. to?

Negro Social Equality

Social recognition of the negro must emanate in Washington, a thought from which he recoils.