THE JEW.

A WEALTHY son of Israel's tribe behold,
Return'd from 'Change, lin'd with Bank-notes and gold;
He stops awhile, still fing'ring o'er his pelf,
Then bobbles on, thus jabb'ring to himself:—
“Py Cot! these Lott'ries seem to promise well,
All buy the Tickets, few are left to sell;
'Tis plain the public find their int'rest out;
I should have bought—what have I been about?
Bless Moses! still it may not be too late
For Twenty Thousands, or a good Estate;
I'll purchase quickly, for I fear they'll rise,
One hour's delay may lose the noblest Prize.
Cot give me luck, of that I see no danger,
Good luck, I mean, for years it's been no stranger:”
Here's double chance; now the bold, the witty,
May gain the best built houses in the City.
The Lott'ry bears the palm o'er each invention;
Freeholds and Fortunes claim your strict attention.

THE MILLINER.

THIS lass, whose true shape thro' her dress is display'd,
Who turns with a smile, whose left hand holds the shade,
Was lately a milliner's girl, till the jade
Had luck in the Lottery, and laid by her trade:
Now blest with affluence, contentment, and health,
Admir'd for worth, independent of wealth,
She treads the gay circles, where many aspire
To gain her affections with ardent desire.
Ye fair ones, whose charms claim the world's admiration,

Britannia's blest daughters! the pride of our nation!
'Tis wealth join'd with beauty allows no resistance,
And virtue alone may oft need its assistance:
The City's new Lott'ry now comes to your aid;
Rich Freeholds are offer'd—wife, widow, or maid;
With Houses worth Thousands, no Land-Tax to pay;
The Drawing's so near, 'twill admit no delay:
Now purchase, a snug independence to make,
'Tis Fortunes and Freeholds, dear girls, are the stake.

The BAKER.

THE Baker, who serves you good bread, may be said
 To claim the first pref'rence o'er others in trade ;
 'Tis Nature's main prop, 'tis the staff will prevail,
 To hold us up longest, if others should fail ;
 But that must give way, and you drop to the ground
 If baking should stop, and no cash can be found ;
 'Tis that does the business, 'tis cash keeps us jogging,
 Keeps commerce in motion, prevents the wheels clogging.

Then gold must be sought for, when that can be had,
 All things come in concert to make the heart glad,
 To seek it o'er mountains, wide deserts, and seas,
 Is needless, while others near home, at their ease,
 Made wise by experience, from sources of treasure,
 Immense beyond bounds, are provided at pleasure
 With wealth from the Lott'ry, for present supply,—
 The City gives Houses, a Prince might envy
 The ground made your own, the Land-tax for ever Redeem'd, it's the time to get rich, now or never While Freeholds and Fortunes, too num'rous to mention,
 May thus be obtain'd, they shou'd claim your attention.

Man of Independence.

THE man whose coffers are well stor'd with treasure,
May stand at ease, and contemplate with pleasure
The boundless good he's able to bestow
On each inferior rank in life below :
Would you, like him, possess the means to glide
Thro' life serenely, with a flowing tide,
What like the Lottery can at once prevail
To waft you forward with a swelling sail ?
Where can ambition find so wide a scope
For golden dreams, and realize each hope ?
While others strive, and meet but slender gains,
Which scarce reward them for their daily pains,
'Tis there, at once, you have the chance to rise
To boundless affluence with a single Prize !
Would you possess a House and Freehold Land ?
Speak but the word, they're ready to your hand, !
Of various value, fix'd at moderate bounds,—
From Two to Five-and-Twenty Thousand Pounds,
Discharg'd of Land-Tax : these, at Fortune's call,
The City yields in April, at Guildhall.

THE Irish Basket Woman.

WITH pipe and geneva, observe this old dame,
Who, year after year, has long play'd the same game ;
Still tippling and sneaking, to pass away sorrow,
Makes sure of to-day, but ne'er thinks on tomorrow ;
Yet, while her disasters Miss-Conduct has brought in,
Unjustly complains of the tricks of Miss-Fortune :
How many, like her, by imprudence destroy
The fruits of hard labour ; which, would they employ
To purchase more permanent blessings, might raise,
Them up to affluence the rest of their days.
What state is so humble but, manag'd with care,
Enough may be spar'd for a Ticket or Share ?
The Lott'ry makes many ; and Fortune intends,
This time, in the City, to treat all her friends
With Fortunes and Freeholds, from Land-Tax quite clear,
With Houses will let for some thousands a-year ;
All this she now offers—say, who'd be content
To live in a cottage, still paying of rent,
When Mansions like these, for a trifle so small,
You'll gain when, in April, they draw at Guildhall

THE WAGGONER.

YOU'VE read the Fable, or if not, you may,
How, when his Waggon stuck fast in the clay,
A Carter prostrate on the ground at length,
Sought for assistance from the God of Strength;
To whom the angry Deity replied,
Rise up thou fool, and let thy whip be tried,
Exert thyself, and make thy Horses feel,
Apply thy shoulder closely to the wheel,
Play well thy part, then if you fail, ne'er doubt
I'll hear your prayer, and quickly help you out.
So should we all observe this sturdy Clown,
He drove his team but lately up to Town,
Tried the State Lott'ry, (Fortune loves the bold)
And gain'd his hat (tho' large) brimfull of gold;
See with what archness he directs his eyes,
With emulation to a City Prize:
Freeholds and Fortunes are the things at stake,
'Tis those who purchase only can partake.

THE HAY MAKER.

THE peasant, who labours a summer's long day,
 In Sol's burning heat, and receives but low pay,
 Procures, at the most, but a scanty subsistence,
 While plenty smiles round, and remains at a distance;
 Still Hope spurs him on, while he, cheerful and gay,
 Reaps in the ripe harvest, or turns the new hay.
 Ye sons of Industry! you hope not in vain,—
 See Fortune's rich harvest, where gold is the grain,
 Now ripe for the sickle; 'tis there you may glean
 Whole laps-full of wealth (from the Lott'ry, I mean);
 There many have gain'd independence and ease,
 And many may now do the same, if they please.
 A crop so abundant deserves ev'ry hand;
 Here's treasure, lads, offer'd, with Houses and Land;
 The City invites you, now quickly advance—
 Guildhall is the place, there you'll soon have a chance
 For Freeholds and Fortunes; sure, none will forbear,
 While such may be had, to put in for a Share.

The Hostess.

OBSERVE this hostess, fed on English cheer—
Roast beef, plum-pudding, and her drink strong beer;

Content and rosy health here take their station,
She seems an emblem of the British Nation;
Blest with abundance, in her hand behold
A sample only of our Lott'ry's gold,
Gain'd with some thousands this she well can spare
And means to venture for a City share.
Her fortune's made, yet Fortune's Wheel she tries
Still to increase it with a Freehold Prize;
Take her example, now's the time to make
Prodigious profit by a trifling stake;
You're likely lands and houses to obtain,
Two Thousand Pounds the lowest Prize you'll gain
It may to six or seven Thousands swell;
Perhaps your lot may be the GRAND HOTEL
Worth Five-and-twenty, of Land-Tax discharged;
Your income thus may nobly be enlarged.

The PRUDENT MAN.

THE man, whose lot allows him leisure hours,
 May sit at ease, and use his mental powers,—
 Muse o'er his cane, his cane support his chin,
 And retrospective turn his thoughts within;
 And happy he, who, thus employ'd, can find
 True pleasure spring from an enlighten'd mind;
 'Twill bear him cheerful thro' disease or health,
 While with discretion he enjoys his wealth:
 Gold thus employ'd secures him many a blessing,
 Then Gold's an object surely worth possessing.
 Would you obtain it, now's the time to try,—
 The Lott'ry offers each a large supply.
 Kind Fortune courts you to her fond embrace,
 Unfolds her treasures, and unveils her face;
 Now scatt'ring favours with a lib'ral hand,
 Tens, Twenty Thousands, rise at her command!
 From London's City (long her blest abode!)
 Immense Estates will quickly be bestow'd,—
 Both Ground & Houses,—Land-Tax none to pay!
 Press forward now, nor make the least delay!
 Time flies impatient—ev'ry chance is double;—
 Freeholds & Fortunes must reward your trouble.

BEHOLD young Puff,—he sallies forth, array'd
Each morning, with his implements of trade ;
Hail, rain, or shine, his business must be done ;
True to his time as the diurnal sun,
He trots along ; his earnings are but small ;
Still cheerful, he attends to every call.
Sons of stern labour Fortune points the plan,
Which, if you follow, e'en a barber's man
May, for a trifle, such as all can spare,
Gain independence, or, at least a share

The Negro.

SEE Afric's daughter! view that harmless face!
And blush, ye tyrants of the human race!
Torn from her friends, in bondage doom'd to toil!
Arriv'd at last in Freedom's native soil,
Britannia takes compassion on her pains,
Knocks off her fetters, and destroys her chains!
Now equal to the rights we all enjoy,
See how she fondles o'er her darling boy;
See raptures dart in radiance from her eyes,
Now Fortune's blest her with a Lott'ry Prize;
'Tis doubly sweet, when thus relenting Fate
Makes restitution e're it is too late.
Ye free-born Britons, generous, just, and bold!
Loose not one moment, if you wish for gold;
Or, would you have Estates of Freehold Lands,
With Houses built up ready to your hands!
A noble Prize, worth many a Thousand Pound,
May start, when once the City Wheel goes round.
Freeholds and Fortunes, such as may incite,
A monarch, for your int'rest now unite.

Sir John Fore-thought,

With a Competence in Old Age.

SINCE all are subject to a num'rous train
Of ills, disast'rous grief, disease, and pain;
While health remains, we should exert each power,
Strain ev'ry nerve, and watch the cheerful hour,
When Fortune smiles ('tis virtuous to be wise),
And catch her favours, fondly, as they rise.
How diff'rent he, who, rack'd with gout, can live
In that indulgence wealth alone can give,
From him whose pangs, with poverty combin'd,
Are still increas'd by an uneasy mind.
Would you, my friends, provide, as now you may,
Against the evils of some future day,
What like the Lott'ry is, or can be plann'd,
To grant supplies with such a lib'ral hand?
Tens, Twenty Thousands, may be gain'd with pleasure,
The Scheme affords an endless source of treasure;
'Tis now the time, the City's ample Wheel
Goes round in April; then they'll surely deal
Rich new-built Houses, each a real Estate;
Be quick to purchase, or you'll be too late:
Fortunes and Freeholds are the goods in store
For those who venture—can you wish for more?

TUNE.---“ Widow Waddle.”

IF House and Land for Life you'd gain, and Ways and Means would try,
I'll tell you What, a lucky Share in CITY LOTT'RY buy;
And if, by Luck befriended, you gain the HIGHEST Prize,
You'll own that Fortune's Frolic's an Agreeable Surprise!

With my tick a te, &c.

All in the Wrong are those who think another time will do;
Delays and Blunders must await, should you this plan pursue:
DECEMBER next this Lottery draws; indeed, I am no Liar;
Then, ere the Wheel of Fortune turns, for Riches you must try her.

With her tick a te, &c.

Then, Hit or Miss, your Chances try, all who to gain are willing
A City Freehold House and Land for Eight Pound Fifteen Shilling;
Blue Devils ne'er will haunt you, and you no more will find,
Poor Soldier-like, occasion for Raising of the Wind.

With your tick a te, &c.

No longer the Poor Gentleman, but Fortune made for Life,
With Cash in Iron Chest, you'll make a Bold Stroke for a Wife;
And Luck no more a Stranger, you'll ne'er Inconstant find,
While Fortune, As you Like It, goes wherever you're inclin'd,

With her tick a te, &c.

That this is no Blind Bargain will by ev'ry one be found,
For all the World well know it's worth One Hundred Thousand Pounds;
And as Seeing is Believing, ev'ry disbelieving elf
May read Surveyors' Estimate, and satisfy himself.

With his tick a te, &c.

How to Grow Rich, I thus have shewn, and if you're Out of Place
In Fortune's graces, buy a Share, and she will you replace;
But if you're like the Weathercock, and don't Know your own Mind,
A Cure for the Heart-Ache you can ne'er expect to find.

With a tick a te, &c.

THIRD AND LAST

GRAND CITY LOTTERY

Of FREEHOLD HOUSES,

Will be drawn in Guildhall, 4th DECEMBER.

CERTIFICATE.

We, whose names are hereunto subscribed, have carefully surveyed and valued the several Freehold
Buildings allotted as Prizes in the Third City Lottery, and we adjudge the separate value of each to be as follows. (See Scheme.)

F. PAYNTER.
THOMAS SWITHIN,
D. R. ROPER.

London, Aug. 24, 1809.

This Property is so rapidly improving, that there can be no doubt it will be worth double its present value in a very few years — A re-valuation by several eminent Surveyors has been recently made, and it is ascertained that the Buildings are now worth upwards of £130,000.

THIS DAY, Feb. 14, St. Valentine's Day.

Tho' at all times and seasons 'tis right to pay court
To the Goddess of Fortune, and seek her support,—
To implore her kind blessing, and study to please,
By attending her Galas, her Routs, and Levees—
Yet beyond contradiction I'll venture to say,
That throughout the whole year there's no time like To-DAY.

If you ask me to prove it, I very soon can,
To the full satisfaction of every Man—
The rich Goddess of Fortune, and the worthy Saint,
Who's the Patron of Lovers, as all Poets paint,
From time immemorial THIS DAY have assign'd,
To endow all their Vot'ries, each one to their mind.

But this season they call in the JOLLY God's aid,
To increase the delights which for you have been made;
And besides the rich Prizes the Goddess bestows,
For the 4th of Next Month, the Grand Scheme will disclose,
That a Purchase THIS DAY may for ever combine
The choice Riches of For une with Bacchus's Vine.

Then can you neglect so auspicious a day?
If you do, ten to one you'll repent your delay;
For perhaps the contents both of Bacchus's Cup,
And the Goddess's Horn, may be all swallow'd up
Ere To-Morrow—and thus you will thwart the design
Of Dame Fortune—of Bacchus—and St. Valentine.

3 Prizes of £30,000
