

rich and poor

Could a part of all men call? or power call? a part, in former, the poor - if it is right or any way, how can it be in a condition checked by all - if a prop^y qualify? when does the line - it is to be formed by the men of prop^y, and then it will be that extent finally to the majority of those men of prop^y would carry it:

excl^d for want of number goes upon other prices -

Poor men oppress the rich - rich men by do the poor - the last when does to extremes but when they have found their strength here in their hands with oppression - go? then? it is so formed as to manage their rights and all the cons^t & necessity attend them -

The cons^t may attack the poor by the right of sufferage, but not the rich - the last class has a right of their property - the first here for it only for the right not to be overruled - for one & many takes it away -

No cons^t can long stand & excl^d the poor - they are by their wealth more its prop^y - add to them the rich the discons^t the disapp^r and the arms and the party will be too strong for the poor - but make the poor love the cons^t - then they will the power to good men and grow? with a strength too strong for the factious few.

The diff^y of men are equal to a power yet and to the power of liberty - but they are only of use as far as they permit to have a share in it - when comp^d of all - incl^d of all cases - when power goes to a part only - they are then into oppressions and oppressions - you must first enable the government to control the governed; and in the next place oblige it to control itself :

you must provide mutual checks among the several departments of power;

all power must be derived thro' different channels from the people;

be distributed to the different branches, so as best to suit their interests; each branch ^{mutually} independant of the others; and all dependant on the people :

No danger can be apprehended to liberty from this revision for as long as the principles of liberty are engrafted on the government, any alteration will tend to much additional security:

A revolution formed by liberty, becomes a confirmation of liberty.

Hume

We balance a state or society whether with monarchical or republican or general laws, is a work of so great difficulty that no human genius however comprehensive is able by the mere dint of reason and reflection to effect it. The judgment of many men is to be taken in the work. Experience must guide their labour, time must bring it to perfection, and the fallacy of income concern must correct the translation which they inevitably fall into, in their first heat and experiments.

It is proper that a single light open a door for the making of alterations, but that upon all alterations ought to be decided only by the major part of the people.

The argument also contain a sufficient answer to the objection that are made from the supposed dangers to which our religious liberties and the freedom of the press are exposed; because there is not a power given to Congress in any part of the constitution which will give them authority to injure either of those sacred rights. Religious opinions have no connection with and are independent of all civil governments. The only possible way by which Congress could have injured them might & could have been by fixing such a test in their oath of office ~~as would~~ as would have given the preference to some particular sect, but that the constitution has sufficiently guarded against by declaring "that no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States" and thus has fully established that prejudice, &c. by which ought always to prevail among ~~the~~ ^{the} different denominations.
