THE HARPER MEMORIAL.

The speaker before the Sunday Evening club at Orchestra hall last Sunday paid a just tribute to the late President Harper. He found in his life and achievements a splendid illustration of Christian optimism. The choice of such an example from among Chicago men of achievement emphasized the steadily growing conviction of the deep obligation under which the city rests to one who contributed so much to its higher and better life.

In a true sense the University of Chicago will stand as his noblest monument. His innate modesty made him shrink during his lifetime from any association of his name with the material equipment of the institution which grew to strength under his astonishing administrative skill. Now that his work is done, it seems a fitting thing that the university library, the center of the real life of those who are reaping the scholastic rewards he made possible, should be the particular and special tribute of his friends and admirers. To make it the crowning glory of a splendid pile of noble structures which has won the praise of university men from all the world and has given a new meaning to "Chicago" should be an enterprise making strong appeal to every believer in the greater and better city.

Chicago ought to make this building a reality in the near future. Its walls will rise as a living monument to Dr. Harper if the comparatively small amount of $36,000 is secured during the next ten weeks. Those few thousands, added to what already has been provided, will mean an $800,000 library for the university. That library's service to the sons and daughters of Chicago who are crowding the university's halls to overflowing cannot be measured in money. The Harper memorial library enterprise must not fail.

Paul Mandeville may be called in 1909
