34 OLIVER STREET,
BOSTON, MASS., Jan. 29, 1917.

Dr. Harry P. Judson, Pres.,
Chicago, Ill.

My dear Mr. Judson:-

A plan is under way to secure for a Memorial in behalf of National Prohibition, the signatures of one thousand men of eminence in American life. Among those to be appealed to will be manufacturers, bankers, railway presidents, university leaders, scientists, physicians, labor leaders, editors, and men in public life. It is hoped that this demonstration will have a weighty influence in securing wide public support to the policy of alcohol prohibition.

The work of securing the names will be undertaken by a sub-committee of the Committee of Sixty, under the guidance of Prof. Irving Fisher of Yale. The draft of the declaration to be signed is enclosed. Important names have already come in. We should be deeply gratified to have the support of your influential signature in initiating this movement. We can give you the best assurances that it will be put through with judgment and tact.

With sincere regards,

Faithfully yours,

Enclosure.

Your favor of the 29th inst. is received. I cannot sign the memorial, first because I never sign petitions of any sort, and secondly because I do not believe in a national prohibitory amendment. This is a matter which in my judgment should be left to the states.

In view of the scientifically proved unfavorable effects of the use of alcoholic beverages even in small quantities;
And in view, therefore, of the colossal physical, mental, moral, economic, social and racial evils which the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquor entail;
And in view of the inadequateness of all methods hitherto employed to check or regulate these evils;
And in view of the great and rapid growth of public knowledge and sentiment on this subject as shown by anti-alcohol agitation and legislation through most of our national area;
The undersigned believe the time has come for the Federal Government to take steps looking to the prohibition in the United States of the manufacture, sale, import, export and transport of alcoholic liquors.*
