The War Activity of Robert Andrews Millikan, Professor of Physics, the University of Chicago -

In March 1917, two weeks before the United States entered the war, Professor Millikan was called to Washington as Vice-Chairman of the National Research Council, charged particularly with the task of assisting in mobilizing the scientific men and scientific resources of the country in aid of the war. As a representative of the Research Council he sat upon the original Munitions Board, which later became the War Industries Board, and was otherwise actively engaged in the work of the Council of National Defense in the spring and early summer of 1917.

In this period he acted as Chairman of the Optical Glass Committee of this Council, which committee organized the development of optical glass in the United States and brought up the American output of this all essential munition from nothing to a supply adequate to take care not only of our needs, but of a part of the demands of our allies.

He organized the conference held under the auspices of the Research Council between the French Scientific Mission and a specially selected group of American scientists. This conference dealt in large measure with the submarine problem.

In June 1917 he was appointed by the Secretary of the Navy as one of the advisory members of the special board of the Navy on anti-submarine devices, which board consisted of three naval officers and four advisory members, and was charged with the entire responsibility for organizing and directing anti-submarine experimenting in the United States.

He was active in the organization of the anti-submarine experimental station at New London, which became the center of the anti-submarine experimenting of the country, and was manned so far as its chief personnel was concerned by a group of ten scientists selected by the conference mentioned above.

During the summer of 1917 he was acting Chairman of the National Research Council and responsible for the initiation and organization of the Research Information Service of the Council, and of a weekly conference of the Physics and Engineering Divisions of the Council, a conference which became the center for the interchange of ideas between the various groups in the Army, Navy and civil life, which were seen

He was active in the organization of the anti-submarine experimental station at New London, which became the center of the anti-submarine experimentation of the country, and was named as far as the chief personnel was concerned by a group of the scientists selected by the conference mentioned above.

During the summer of 1917 he was acting Chairman of the National Research Council and responsible for the initiation and organization of the Research Information Service of the Council, and of a weekly conference of the Physics and Engineering Divisions of the Council, a conference which became the center for the interchange of ideas between the various groups in the Army, Navy and civil life, which were engaged in physical research work in aid of the war.

Like many others ^{in August 1917} who had been active in the work of the Council of Defense, he was given a commission in the Signal Corps and placed in charge of the so-called Science and Research Division of the Signal Corps, which later, at the time of the division of the Signal Corps, became the Science and Research Department of the Bureau of Aircraft Production. In this capacity he held ^{the} rank first of a Major, which was changed in January 1918 to Lieutenant Colonel.

He organized ^{and directed} the ~~whole~~ meteorological service of the Army, a considerable portion of the research work of the Signal Corps on signalling and detection, and a large part of the research work of the Bureau of Aircraft Production on aviation instruments and accessories. The Science and Research Division, at the head of which he was placed, consisted of some 60 officers and civilians of large scientific and technical attainments, and of about 350 enlisted men. It was divided into six sections as follows: the Aeronautic Instrument Section, the Airplane Photography Section, the Bomb Dropping Stabilization and Bomb Trajectories Section, the Chemical Section, the Signaling and General Problems Section, and the Meteorological Section. At the time of the signing of the armistice this division had under development approximately 70 problems, about 20 of which had already yielded results of greater or less military significance.

He was discharged from the service on December 31st, 1918.

McCLURE'S for MAY

Bridgeport, Connecticut, but a brand-new plant specially erected for this purpose a short distance out of New York City. And the final result was that, throughout 1919, America would have turned out more of these three-inch and six-inch guns than France and England combined, and at a great saving.

Here is another story of a characteristically American achievement, the sort of thing that "jarred" the Germans. It sets forth the effort of a certain Chicago professor to serve his country — early in 1918. This professor knew nothing about guns or ammunition or the flight of projectiles, but he was one of the great mathematicians of the country, one of those astonishingly gifted men who not only grasp easily all the intricacies of higher mathematics that cause the despair of ordinary mortals, but who actually go ahead and invent mathematical systems of their own, something that is higher still — parabolic function, or elliptical functions or what not, just for the sheer joy of the thing. These great mathematicians are quiet and modest citizens in everyday life, but when they begin to talk about their specialties they find themselves in a highly rarefied atmosphere, where only half a dozen men on a continent can understand them.

It was a mathematician of this caliber who told a celebrated astronomer that if, on a certain night at a certain minute and fraction of a second, he would point his telescope to exactly such a point in the heavens, he would find an undiscovered planet — he must find it because higher mathematics proved that it was there. And, sure enough, there it was, the planet being Neptune, as every one knows.

It is a mathematician of this caliber who is to-day paid a hundred thousand dollars a year by one of our great electrical companies just to sit and look out of the window and think his particular kind of mathematical thoughts — which save the company millions!

Such a man was this Chicago mathematician, who came to Washington, having volunteered his services for the War, and was fortunately recognized as the very man in all America best qualified to deal with certain baffling problems connected with the flight of projectiles. One shudders to think what a difference it would have made if his precious talents had not been recognized and if he had simply been sent over to France to fight in the trenches. Happily, Washington knew how to sift and assign such men, according to fitness, and the professor was received with open arms, given a major's commission and told to sit down with pencil and paper and see if his unusual knowledge would enable him to make any practical suggestions for improving the work of our field artillery, about which he knew absolutely nothing.

The professor smiled and sat down, and after a few months of calculation he reported that he had reached certain conclusions. I am unable to indicate what his calculations were, and no one would understand them anyway, for he is the kind of man whose deepest sorrow in life grows out of the fact that logarithmic tables are made out only to ten places of decimals!

Among other things, this abstract mathematician informed the government experts that, if they would make some slight changes in the shape of the tip of the nose of their six-inch shell, and some slight changes in the curve of its tail, and some slight changes in the form of the rotating copper band that fits in the rifled grooves of the gun-barrel that makes the projectile turn, then he thought they would be pleased with the results.

Pleased! The experts were simply astounded, when, having made these trifling and inexpensive changes, they tried out the modified projectile in the roaring six-inch guns that hurl high explosive shells eight miles or more. Here surely was something to make the whole world sit up and take notice, for, with the same gun, the same powder charge, the same conditions of fire, save for the changes mentioned, this professor of mathematics, who knew nothing about war, had actually gained results in accuracy on the target and in distance of flight that surpassed any previous accomplishments of these six-inch guns or of any other six-inch guns. His projectiles, with their noses a little sharper, their tails a little rounder, their rotating bands a wee bit different, now traveled two or three miles farther and very much straighter than six-inch projectiles had ever traveled before either in America or Europe!

Says an official report that I have been privileged to read: "A long series of experiments in modifying the standard projectile in machine shops in Aberdeen was carried out in 1918, with the result that the range was increased 4,000 meters and the dispersing (scattering of shots) decreased to about one-eighth of its original value."

And subsequent results were even better, an increase of range of sixty per cent. (about five miles) being reported in October, 1918.

Which simply and literally means that, had the final test come, the best German batteries of six-inch guns would have been hopelessly outranged and out-targeted, blown to pieces before they could strike back, by our American six-inch batteries.

I may add that these remarkable improvements in range and accuracy apply not only to our six-inch guns, but more or less to guns of other calibers; so this is a permanent advance in the science of gunnery, although the changes themselves seem unimportant. Without spending an extra dollar in the manufacture of these guns and projectiles, the numerous industries working in cooperation with the American Ordnance Department have obtained an enormously better result.

All of which makes one wonder why Germany, with her boasted efficiency and her forty years of intensive preparation for war, did not think of busying some of her abstract mathematicians with important problems of projectile flight. I should like to put that question to Von Hindenburg!

America did with steel to win the War*

I served over seas with the America Red Cross from Sept 1918 to March 1919. & was discharged as Captain from that organization in March 1919. but it does not seem to me that service of this sort belongs with military or naval service in the records of the University. My writings on war subjects I have already reported on to Mr. Robinson.

My military service in the United States Army has been as follows: I was first enlisted in the United States Army in 1917 at the age of 21 years.
I served in the 1st Central Postal Directory, 1st Army, France, from 1917 to 1918. I was then transferred to the 1st Central Postal Directory, 2nd Army, France, in 1918. I served in this position until 1919, when I was discharged. I was then employed as a civilian in the United States Army from 1919 to 1921. I was then discharged and have since been employed as a civilian in the United States Army.

from May, 1918 till the Committee I was at the front with exception of a two-weeks for leave.
The most impressive work I had a chance to do was with the volunteers (returned prisoners of war) who came back to Germany from Germany after the Committee.
